NCPTA Names New Executive Director

The North Carolina Public Transportation Association (NCPTA) has selected David Rhew as its new Executive Director. He succeeds Stephen Mancuso, who becomes the Association's new Business Manager effective October 16.

Rhew, a North Carolina native, brings more than 30 years of broadcast journalism, community engagement, and collaborative non-profit advocacy experience to this role.

Camille Sterling, NCPTA President stated that "the North Carolina Public Transportation Association's Board of Director's is excited to have David Rhew accept the offer to be the Executive Director." "David is looking forward to working with members and agencies across the state to meet the Associations mission statement of supporting our members and the public they serve through advocacy, education, and collaboration."

As Executive Director, Rhew will guide the organization's program of work and its member outreach initiatives. He is a graduate of the University of Alabama and lives in Charlotte with his wife, Mary. They have two grown children.

About the North Carolina Public Transportation Association

NCPTA is a private non-profit organization that was incorporated in 1983 and represents transportation providers in all 100 counties. This diverse group of System Members range from large urban transit systems operating light rail vehicles and large buses to the smallest of rural transit systems operating just a few vans.
